Dear Russ:

We are all anxiously awaiting the favorable reply on our reciprocal negotiations which you expect to have by Friday.

It is my understanding at the present time that General Sibert will personally make the trip over to the new location as the official representative of CIA. However, it is my understanding that his present plans will not permit him to depart for at least another thirty days, therefore, I doubt that the group to which we have been referring will be on its way for another month.

In view of this fact, I wonder what your feelings are toward permitting [redacted] to return to London by boat rather than by air. I believe you know that [redacted] will not, travel by air, consequently, it will be necessary for her to travel alone by ship following [redacted] a few days. While I can see no serious objection to this, in her present condition, it would probably be desirable to have [redacted] return with her, and in view of the fact that you probably will not be going to this new location immediately it might be agreeable to you to let him return by ship rather than by air. He is perfectly agreeable to return by air and have [redacted] follow and has made no request to me to change the plans for him.

I would appreciate your reaction to this by teletype so that we can make the necessary reservations.
